GENERAL

1. Kennan comments on Sino-Soviet Communique:

[redacted] [redacted] The Sino-Soviet communique reveals, in the opinion of Ambassador Kennan, that the Chinese Communists have been compelled not only to accept but actually to request an indefinite continuation of the USSR's presence in Port Arthur in order to obtain some satisfaction of their military needs from the USSR.

Kennan speculates that while the communique did not mention the Korean war, "sinister" military decisions may have been made. He notes no evidence, however, that the Soviet Union is preparing for major military operations and comments that the Soviet reply avoided a hint in the Chinese note that the Far Eastern situation might call for the implementation of the Sino-Soviet Treaty.

7. Britain to seek Egyptian cooperation on Sudan constitution:

[redacted] [redacted] discuss with Prime Minister Nagib the Sudanese constitution, which is due to become effective on 8 November, and try to obtain his cooperation.

50X1(1)

If Nagib appears willing to participate in a proposed international commission to observe the ensuing Sudanese elections but wants time to prepare, London will recommend that the elections be postponed for a few weeks. If he asks about the protection of his country's long-range interests, the British may suggest that the electoral commission become a continuing advisory group to the Governor General.

Comment: The military regime in Cairo, now primarily concerned with domestic problems, has so far taken no definite stand on major foreign issues. Despite Nagib's friendly gestures to the West, the extreme nationalism of several government members makes it doubtful that Egypt will readily accept the new British proposals.

8. Field Marshal Montgomery suggests reduction in Greek Army:

[redacted] Deputy SHAPE Commander Montgomery reportedly told high Greek officials on 13 September that he believes an army of seven well-equipped divisions rather than the present ten divisions should be adequate for Greece. Montgomery suggested that Greece should present the problem of its excessive military budget to NATO because American aid would probably end within a year or two.

Prime Minister Plastiras subsequently informed the American Ambassador that the armed forces would not be reduced. He reiterated that no important decision would be made without prior discussion with the US Embassy.

Comment: Montgomery made a similar suggestion last May which was immediately used by Greek officials to bolster requests for increased foreign aid to maintain the current strength of the armed forces. His unofficial suggestions may again encourage Greek maneuvers for additional aid either from NATO or the United States, which is on record as not favoring a reduction of Greek armed forces.
