5. Stability of Bolivian government reportedly threatened by RFC decision:

25X1A

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation's decision not to discuss a contract for the purchase of Bolivian tin ores is a blow from which the present Bolivian government may not recover, in the opinion of Ambassador Sparks. He added that without the assurance of a US market for half of the country's tin production, economic chaos with the attendant political consequences will be hastened.

The RFC decision, which has not yet been made public, "came as a bombshell" to the Bolivian cabinet and caused it to wonder whether the United States is trying to force the Paz government out of office.

Comment: Bolivian Ambassador Andrade in Washington has been informed that the RFC decision is based on the fact that the United States now has sufficient tin to meet its estimated requirements.

The decision is likely to be distorted in Bolivia as US retaliation for the government's tin nationalization decree of last October.
