1. INDIA REACTS SHARPLY TO UN PLEBISCITE
RESOLUTION ON KASHMIR

The state of tension in India, resulting from the UN Security Council's resolution of 24 January which called for a plebiscite in Kashmir, is also reflected in Krishna Menon's statement to Ambassador Lodge on 28 January that there is danger of Pakistani "fedayeen" attacks in Kashmir and that if they occur, he favors taking over all of Pakistan.

The Indian press has lashed out at "the interested and mischievous role" played by Britain and the United States throughout the Kashmir dispute.

India's belligerent attitude will probably become even more extreme in reply to Pakistan's proposal for introduction of a UN force into Kashmir. However New Delhi, which controls most of the disputed state, is unlikely to provoke hostilities unless it decides that this is the only way to prevent a plebiscite--which it would probably lose to Pakistan.

Karachi is equally unlikely to precipitate a conflict as long as it continues to receive UN support.

IMPLICATING WESTERN NATIONS

A reliable source of the American legation in Budapest states that many Hungarians deported to the USSR after the revolution have been returned and are now in a Budapest prison. The returnees are being released only if they sign a "confession" admitting "contact" with Western powers.

Comment Such confessions may be used in the forthcoming political trials to implicate Western states and their diplomatic missions in the Hungarian uprising.

Hungary has accelerated its anti-Western campaign during the past week, and the legation believes that efforts to hamper the activities of Western missions in Budapest are already under way.

these developments, and fear that Paris will not realize the necessity of major policy readjustments to meet the new situation.

According to the deputy high commissioner of French West Africa, the Africans now say they plan to turn the federations of West and Equatorial Africa into two independent states associated with France rather than accepting the French plan for 12 autonomous territories.

Local French officials are deeply disturbed over current political developments in French West Africa, particularly by the growing demands for early self-government. The American consul general at Dakar notes that they are most concerned over the rapid pace of

Comment

Most of this change in African attitude has taken place since French Togoland was granted autonomy in late 1956, and has been influenced by developments in North Africa and the Gold Coast.

West African territorial leaders recently supported a refusal of the Grand Council at Dakar to discuss the budget because of dissatisfaction with the implementation of the new basic reform law. The African majority of the representatives on a committee of the French National Assembly voted unanimously on 24 January to grant larger powers to African councils.
